Chapel Hour

The interesting subject of future Public Health was forceably described and presented to the entire student body by Dr. Pomeroy, health officer of Los Angeles County. Among the many enlightening remarks, he stressed the theme of the personal art of the medical profession. We must not only acquire the mechanics of medicine, but a working knowledge of its psychology as well. He suggested at this point that medical students should complete their education by spending a year in an asylum for the insane. Coupled with this thought of personal welfare, he brought in the feature of salesmanship. The fact that the Charlatan sells false ideas is proof positive that the selling of correct ideas is not an impossibility. Another note of interest was the prominence given the regulation and education of emotional and spiritual life of the individual. To do this, we must begin at a very definite foundation. This foundation embraces the millions of school children of the country, and even as far back as pre-natal care, and the social aspects of the entire family. We are indeed glad for these opportunities afforded us to come in touch with these present-day conditions and difficult problems of public health.

Processional

Last week we listened while a nurse was dedicated to the work of God in India. From time to time we watch the portals of our school swing to allow egress to some commissioned heart farbound. We watch, and are moved.

A Tribute to Leon Baker

A mortal sadness is ours, and grief bows our heads. A life has gone from us. Two hands have left us a mighty work to do with earnestness and bravery. Two feet no longer tread their daily way on kindly ministries of cheer and good will. Two shoulders no longer bear the ceaseless burdens of homely care with a patient grace and a daily prayer. A face of whole-souled honesty is no longer among us. That beautiful life no more will bless with silent rivers of happiness the arid desert of human discouragement.

He sleeps, but the loom of life never stops and the pattern that was weaving when the sun went down is weaving when it comes up tomorrow. We must carry on, -- adding to our responsibilities those of a beloved class member, whose hidden fountains of loveableness and courage would have turned many sick and suffering souls to the Great God in whom he himself now rests.

R. W. Hussong.

"Thy work scarce begun,
Thy sowing and reaping;
Yet good has God done,
And hushed is thy weeping.
From tears and woes
From earth's midnight dreary
Thine is repose,
Where none ever weary.
Sweet be thy rest."

The Calendar

Friday evening: Elder C. H. Parker tells of his long experience in cannibal islands of the So. Pacific. Don't miss this!

Sabbath: Dr. Wirth speaks on International situation as to Prophecy.

Volley Ball

We are now equipped to handle the excess enthusiasm for the needed exercise of the day's program. In other words, the volley ball court is in shape for action. We understand that the Juniors have a well organized team including such men as the following:

Bray, Atkinson, Day, Evans, Miracle, Knoll, Garrett (manager).

The Seniors find it quite impossible to make up a standing army in this field, but on short notice promise to draft a formidable group to fill the bill. It is rumored that the nurses will also be showing their skill and punch at this favorite sport. This is due to the efficient lighting system which is a part of the court.

The Clearing Process

The cartoonist seems to have been guilty of poetic, or rather cartoonic exaggeration, a delightful oriental hyperbole that is the prerogative of all productive minds. Approached on the subject, the artist would hesitantly admit that he had stretched things perceptably, but would call facts to mind in his defense. From his point of view, the situation is truly appalling. Students stagger under their burdens of study, trying to rise above the rising tide of exams. On the other hand, if the Registrar were interviewed, an individual scarcely chosen for his imaginative ability, he would be found methodically checking off the list of examinations given, against a longer list yet to be scheduled. Questioned, he would reply that he was clearing the decks in preparation for the final action to be staged in the middle of June. Between these extremes in physiological reaction to a social problem, "we" the masses, trudge along,--grateful to the artist for trying to represent our cause, and to the Registrar for making the end more tolerable. For ourselves, we hope we shall survive till June, and not be too badly damaged thereafter.

Everyone is urged to be on hand at the State Street Playground to witness the following line-up of Baseball games:

Tuesday 17th
Juniors vs. Academy

Tuesday 24th
Seniors vs. Academy

Thursday May 3
Juniors vs. Seniors

Come and bring your friends, your lungs and vocal cords. These games, to be a success, need your loyal support. Charlie may be there to take the roll, or shall we leave it to Fate?
